Chronicler! Serve today!

WORDS FROM THEIR EXCELLENCIES

We are so excited for Tain Bo this year!. Not only is the Medieval Market returning, but it's going to be bigger than last year with 25 vendors!

Our site, Edenvale Winery, allows dogs on site, as well as propane firepits, so we will be warm and have great company.

Come and enjoy our many martial activities, Arts and Sciences classes, bardic arts, and of course, the maze... now 10% bigger and better!

And don't forget, everything you do at Tain Bo will earn you points to try to bring your branch to victory. We look forward to seeing you there!

The Baronies Bards^B go a conquering...

We here in Glyn Dwfn know that the stars of the great Pantheon shine brightly upon their people, and among them, none are bathed in so much of the twinkling light as our bards.

Steeped in glory, wreathed in most solemn word fame, the bards of Glyn Dwfn make the most merry and meritorious minstrels moan when they meet them at musical measure or mirthfully minded musings.

But back in March, at their Birthday Bash, the Bards of the Bicranial bear brought forth their best beguiling ballads and belabored bluffing barcarolles.

None, however could stand up to the lively lyrical larks, stalwartly spun stories, or magnificent magical melodies of our very own Lady Ainsley Macnab.

She not only defeated all comers upon the bardic stage, but scored a victory in the hearts of the great bears themselves with her rendition of his highness's struggle for inspirational equality.

Deep emotional chords were struck with the Willow and the Rose (by Scianna Augustine), followed by the Willow Maid, a bit of arboreal adornment to a most potent piece for the primus.

With the competition complete, victory was claimed by Lady Ainsley, bardic Champion of Adiantum, and most outstanding child of the Pantheon. Now we can all see that one more of their great stars... shines a just a little bit brighter.

The Principality will have a new Arts and Sciences minister...

None other than Her Excellency Milisandia has answered the gryphon's call to take up the mantle of the Principality's most scholarly office. We all expect great things to come.
